Small University, Big Opportunities

CMU is small enough for professors and students to build relationships that impact learning. Our researching professors love to teach in life-changing ways. Learning is connected across disciplines to help students expand their horizons, develop transferable skills, and engage their world.

We are proud to be the only Canadian university to require a work-integrated learning placement for all students in every degree program. Here, students discover their passions, test their calling, and become equipped for their careers.

CMU connects faith, spirituality, and life. All are welcome here, where curiosity is encouraged, character is formed, and foundations for lives of service, leadership, and reconciliation in church and society are built.

CMU has instilled in me the understanding that any person I meet, whether it be a colleague or a stranger or a friend, has a unique perspective and is deserving of understanding, curiosity and love. When doing research curiosity and listening well opens up wonderful possibilities allowing mysteries to the human experience to be shared and known.

– Claudia Dueck (2022)

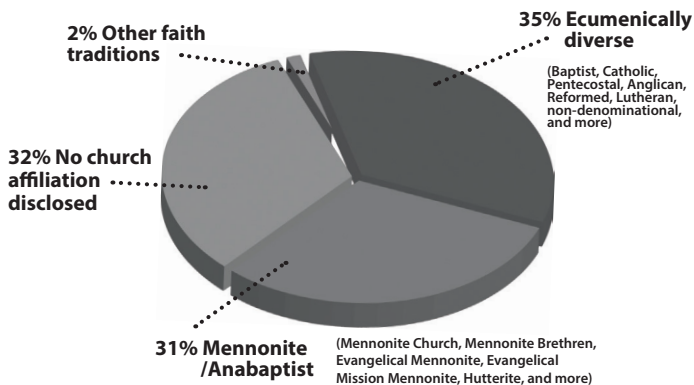

I continue to directly build on my work at CMU in my current graduate studies at Yale, where I am pursuing a Master of Arts in Religion and a Master of Environmental Management. CMU gave me a framework for the best of what interdisciplinary work can be—bringing together theory and practice in ways that made academic work real, purposeful, and applicable to some of the world's most pressing questions.

– Anika Reynar (2017)

CMU's approach to global music education and global development of the whole person has been extremely influential in my life. It has pushed me to be a responsible, respectful, and active global citizen who makes a difference. The care CMU imparts to each individual student is one of a kind and truly extraordinary. I would recommend this institution to any person.

– Stephanie Wilson (2022)
